

Under

the rain song — the one he sings in the dark

from "The Quiet Hours"

lyrics: Lexi

Intro
Freely, then in time (♩ = 70)

Verse 1

Em C^Δ Em C^Δ

mp
Came in from the rain with my hands full of nothing

5 G D Am⁷

Not a thing to my name worth the hold - ing You put something warm where

8 Em C B⁷

the cold had been And you turned a-way be-fore I could pay you in

Chorus

11 C G D Em

mf
And I went un-der I went under In a cit-y that never once asked could I swim

15 C G Am⁷

No hand on the wa-ter no name on the door Just a light in a window I

Verse 2

18 B⁷ Em C^Δ

wasn't look - ing for mp I've been sung to by thousands and heard by not one

21 G D Am⁷

Learned to hold a whole room and let go of the one But a kindness that wants nothing

24 Em C B⁷

back ru-ins a man Three years I've been trying to put it back where it be - gan

Chorus

27 C G D Em

f
And I went un-der I went under In a cit-y that never once asked could I swim

2

31

No hand on the wa-ter no name on the door Just a light in a window I

Outro

B⁷ C^Δ C^Δ

34

wasn't look-ing for And the light had a p (reaching...) (breaks off — unfinished)

Performance notes

Feel — Korean indie-folk / jazz-inflected acoustic ballad. Sparse, aching, restrained. Quarter note = 70, with rubato in the outro.

Guitar — one fingerpicked acoustic, unplugged. The thumb keeps a steady low-E pulse the whole way through — that pedal is the rhythm motif, and the whole song floats over it. No other instruments.

Voice — one intimate male vocal, close-mic'd, breath and string-noise left in. Hushed through the verses (mp); the final chorus cracks (f) and then falls away to nothing.

Harmony — E minor. The jazz color lives in the Cmaj7, Am7, and the B7 that keeps pulling home but never quite rests.

The ending is unfinished by design. And the light had a— climbs and breaks off on a held A over Cmaj7 (the 13th): it never returns to the tonic, and never names the word. Do not complete it. If it ever must move past the cliff, let the melody lift wordlessly — hums — and still refuse to resolve.